

IS YOUR CAR'S SUSPENSION THE PROBLEM?

Some suspension parts wear out with use. Shocks and struts lose their ability to control your ride. Have you had your suspension checked lately?

A major cause of suspension damage is potholes – those nasty magnets that seem to draw our tires right into them. Here are some tips for avoiding damage from potholes: First, keep your tires at their full air pressure. This gives tires their maximum resiliency and will hopefully keep your wheels or other suspension parts from crunching on a big hole. Next, just pay attention. When you see a hole you can't miss, slow down before you hit it. Finally, driving at a slower speed will limit the damage. Don't brake directly over the pothole, this will cause the car's weight to shift forward and add to the potential damage.

WARNING SIGNS

- car pulls to one side
- car wanders or is harder to steer
- uneven tire wear
- leaking shocks
- poor ride or handling
- thumping sound when hitting a bump
